His King John film was the first ever time a Shakespeare play had been filmed. King John has been described by Kenneth McLeish and Stephen Unwin as 'the runt in the litter of Shakespeare's plays on English history', standing outside of his two tetralogies of later Plantagenet plays and the later collaborative work, Henry VIII. It has never been as popular as these other history plays (although the Victorians, with their Tennysonian love of medieval pomp, enjoyed it for its pageantry).
